Diccionario (todos los anexos): [es.geocities.com/anexo/360/Annexo_360_Diccionario.txt](Wednesday, January 30, 2016 Not all of you are aware of this, but the Washington State House of Representatives has passed a bill to decriminalize the possession of up to 50 grams of marijuana. The legislation allows for the possession of up to 50 grams of marijuana for personal use, without getting the person arrested, fined, or sent to jail. This is a huge victory for the marijuana reform movement in Washington State, where the recreational use of marijuana was voted down in 2012. Over the last several years, the medical use of marijuana has been legalized in Washington State, which allows for the use of medical marijuana for people with certain types of illnesses. The state of Washington is the only state in the country where medical marijuana is legal, but the number of people that are eligible to use it has been on the decline in recent years. There have also been some efforts in the legislature to legalize recreational marijuana, but the numbers are still not big enough to pass. The Washington State Senate has not yet voted on the bill, but it is expected to pass later this week. It will then go to the desk of Gov. Jay Inslee, who is expected to sign the bill into law. The passage of this bill is a huge win for the marijuana reform movement in the state. And, it should serve as a reminder to people that the support for marijuana reform in the United States has never been higher. Wednesday, January 23, 2016 Marijuana legalization has been a huge political and social issue in many parts of the United States. This includes the use of marijuana for medical purposes, but also for its potential role in regulating the economy. Marijuana has a well-known and strong prohibition lobby, who have spent a lot of money and energy in recent years trying to oppose legalization. But, marijuana legalization has also been gaining popularity in the country, and the support is continuing to grow. There is growing support for the use of marijuana for medical purposes. Polls show that more than 50 percent of Americans support the legalization of marijuana for medical purposes. But, the support is also growing for the recreational use of marijuana 82157476af
